JZ: We're excited to share a landmark development in our decades plus EV journey that marks a new chapter of Harley-Davidson's legacy. Today we announced we're taking LiveWire public by merging with AEA-Bridges and listing on the New York Stock Exchange. The transaction is likely to complete in first half of 2022. And when it does complete Harley-Davidson will own 70 percent of the new company with the remainder being held by outside investors. As part of the transaction, Harley-Davidson and our strategic partner will be investing $100 million each into the new company. Together, Harley-Davidson, AEA-Bridges and KM believe in the future of LiveWire as a dedicated electric company with the ability to capture growth and lead in the EV industry. This transaction will give LiveWire the dedicated resources and agility needed to continue to pioneer the EV industry with the focus on the pursuit of urban adventure and beyond while allowing Harley-Davidson to focus on the other core elements of the Hardwire, our 2025 strategy to deliver long-term profitable growth. We're very excited for the future of LiveWire as an independent company, however, let's not forget LiveWire is and will always be part of the lineage of Harley-Davidson and carries the heritage and DNA of the most desirable motorcycle brand in the world. What's also important is that Harley-Davidson will benefit in the long run and continued advancement of EV technology and the increase in demand for EV that we expect to see continue.

Ryan Morrissey: LiveWire will utilize its unique position to revolutionize the industry and lead the electrification of the sport of motorcycling. To lead in EV, we'll need a dedicated focus, and this transaction provides that focus and the necessary resources to grow LiveWire as a company and further its leadership in EV. We will increase our investment in R&D, fund new product development, build our digital capabilities and enhance global manufacturing and distribution. And while today's EV technology is not yet the right fit for integration into Harley-Davidson's core products, technology that LiveWire pioneers will benefit both brands in the long term. We're excited to work with Harley-Davidson and KYMCO. LiveWire will benefit greatly from partnering with these industry leaders, leveraging their technical expertise, supply chain, manufacturing footprint and global logistics capabilities. A new chapter in LiveWire's history starts today. We're excited to share it with you.

Jochen Zeitz: Now a thanks goes out to all of you. Getting to this point has taken significant dedication and hard work from our teams. When we launched the Hardwire, it was clear EV would be a core pillar of focus and today's announcement demonstrates our commitment to leading in this space. It's important to remember that the transaction will not complete until the first half of 2022 and today's announcement is only the beginning of that journey. While there are several steps that need to be completed before LiveWire becomes a public company, we're excited to share this historic first step with you all. So, look out for more information as we head into 2022. We'll be sure to share progress and development with you all along the way. Thank you.
